

THE DAILY HERALD

Salt Lake City, Utah.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 17, 1886.

TWELVE PAGES.

EVENTS AND COMMENTS.

THE LONDON Times is valued at $25,000,000; Standard, $10,000,000; News, $9,000,000; Telegraph, $8,000,000.

It is becoming more and more evident that in this country the correct pronunciation of "Mileardo" cannot be settled without bloodshed.—Merchant Traveler.

A PAINT STREAK of light in the New York horizon looks like the advance rays of an Arthur Senatorial boom. Arthur never slipped up on a seventy-nine-cent dollar.

SENATOR FAIR, of Nevada, will pass into history as the Senator who has never made a speech or done any committee work. He has, however, made several millions of dollars.

It is to be feared that General Crook's eminence as an Indian fighter is rapidly becoming less eminent. For three years now he has been engaged in the arduous work of attempting to capture three sick Apaches.

SENATOR HALE is sure that office brokerage is very discreditable in a Democrat. The Republican is getting the going in the operation as at present conducted, which makes all the difference in the world.

OF THE myriads of bills now being poured into the Congressional hopper, very few will ever come out in any recognizable shape. That is the only consolation thought left for an American who contemplates the ambitious efforts of the amateur statesmen at Washington.

CHICAGO USED to take 7200,000 from liquor licenses, but now gets a revenue of $1,500,000 a year from the high license system, the number of saloons having decreased 30 per cent. Burlington used to get $25,000 from licenses, but now gets nothing under prohibition, though the number of saloons has almost doubled.

OUT of the 125 Congressmen who have applied to Speaker Carlisle for a place on the committee on labor, composed of seven members, it would be interesting to know how many of them have done a day's work with their hands in their lives, or within the past dozen years? Political demagogues ought to learn wisdom from the fate of that horny-handed son of toil, Benjamin F. Butler.—Boston Evening Post.

THE BEING words of great men become familiar quotations. The "I still live" of Daniel Webster and other last utterances of the honored dead are often used "to point a moral or adorn a tale." But the last words of Robert Toombs promise to become more familiar household words in the mouths of this and succeeding generations than any other yet recorded. The words were: "Lead me home."

"LIFE is real, life is earnest." There is no discounting this poetical proposition. But it takes a mighty sight of faith to trot the sentiment down a man's gullet when he is imperiously called upon to shell out 50 cents a curl for his wife's hair and $2 per bottle for a dozen "Blooming Youth" face wash and external beautifier, while he has only one solitary pair of darned and patched pants wherein to enclose the most attenuated subdivision of his physical anatomy.

SOME REPUBLICAN papers have begun to see danger in the scheme to pension all survivors of the Union army in the late war, whether they are disabled or not. The Philadelphia Press denounces it after this style:

"We do not believe that the able-bodied men who fought to put down the rebellion want to be billeted on Uncle Sam as pensioners for the rest of their lives. The pressure for more pensions, which is reflected in the bills offered in every Congress—never more than in the present one—comes not from soldiers but from the politicians who think that there is no surer way of winning the hearts and votes of the soldier element than by catering to their supposed appetite for pensions."

M. DE FRAYCINET will not have an easy time with the French Premiership. He was Premier during 1882, when the Egyptian rebellion broke out under Arabi, and to M. de Fraycinet's vacillation then has been attributed the fact that France lost all influence in Egyptian affairs. He shrank from committing his country to armed interference with Egypt and made it possible for England to assume all the responsibility and hence forced on England the final prestige in Egypt, which she still maintains. In truth he was weak just where Gambetta, M. Ferry and M. Briason have all been weak, in having no fixed and strong foreign policy. But he may be the best man to tide the nation over its present high-flying excitement and make France ready for a stronger man.
